1. Before leaving for the conference in Moscow in mid-August the Chinese Communist delegation was instructed by the Central Committee of the Party to press for Soviet agreement to the Chinese proposal for the creation of an Asian council with Communist China in a dominant position. The Chinese proposal was the result of the Soviet post-war policy of unilateral direction of the Communist movement in various Asian countries.
2. In mid-September the Chinese considered that Soviet policies on Asia and Europe, based on outdated political estimates made by the Soviets in 1944, did not take into account the successful Chinese revolution, the formation of a strong Communist government in China, the emergence of China as a strong world power, and the defection of Tito in Europe. The Chinese will not support the international Communist movements of the Soviets until the Soviets recognize China as a world power and the responsible power in Asia.
